This workshop develops the ability to think critically and strategically, enabling participants to assess complex situations, challenge assumptions, and align decisions with long-term goals in dynamic environments. Case studies, simulations, and guided exercises will challenge participants to apply critical and strategic thinking in the context of policy development, organizational transformation, and national planning.

Targeted at senior professionals, policymakers, advisors, managers, and institutional leaders involved in governance, reform, development, or high-level decision-making. It is ideal for those tasked with interpreting complex data, managing competing priorities, and designing long-range strategies.

Led by strategic planning experts, critical thinking specialists, and governance advisors with backgrounds in policy analysis, international development, and executive leadership training. These instructors bring real-world insight and academic rigor, helping participants build mental agility and strategic clarity.
