OVERVIEW

This workshop provides practical and strategic training to ensure that organizations, institutions, and communities are ready to respond effectively to crises. It promotes a proactive approach to risk reduction, emphasizing resilience, coordination, and planning that can save lives and sustain operations in the face of emergencies. Participants will learn how to conduct hazard and vulnerability assessments, develop disaster response plans, implement early warning systems, organize evacuation and shelter strategies, and coordinate with local and national emergency agencies. Emphasis is placed on contingency planning, inter-agency collaboration, communication protocols, and continuity of operations (CCOP) for both public institutions and private organizations.

Audience

Designed for emergency response teams, civil protection agencies, municipal and institutional leaders, school and hospital administrators, security officers, humanitarian workers, and corporate risk managers. Also relevant for NGOs, crisis communication teams, and disaster risk reduction educators.

Instructors

Led by crisis response experts, emergency planners, humanitarian operations specialists, and public safety professionals with field experience in disaster preparedness, simulation training, and multi-sectoral coordination. Instructors combine technical depth with policy and operational insight.
