Environmental Diplomacy

OVERVIEW

This workshop prepares participants to engage in or support environmental diplomacy by providing the legal knowledge, negotiation skills, and geopolitical awareness needed to navigate global environmental negotiations. It empowers professionals to advocate for sustainable outcomes that respect ecological limits and international equity. Participants will gain insight into the principles, actors, and mechanisms of environmental diplomacy, including the roles of the UNFCCC, COP summits, MEAs (Multilateral Environmental Agreements), and regional treaties. The training examines case studies such as the Paris Agreement, the Convention on Biological Diversity, and negotiations on loss and damage finance. Emphasis is placed on the dynamics of global north-south relations, environmental justice, and the politics of scientific evidence in diplomatic contexts.

Audience

Designed for diplomats, environmental policymakers, negotiators, sustainability officers, legal advisors, NGO and international organization staff, climate advocates, and academics involved in international environmental law, climate policy, or multilateral negotiations.

Instructors

Led by international environmental law experts, former climate negotiators, sustainable development advisors, and diplomats with direct experience in UN climate processes, treaty negotiation, and environmental governance. Instructors combine legal insight with diplomatic strategy.
