OVERVIEW

This workshop offers a strategic lens on how war has evolved—and what that means for today's military planning, diplomacy, and security policy. Participants will gain a structured understanding of the shift from traditional armed conflict to hybrid, cyber-enabled, and multi-domain confrontation. The course bridges military history, geopolitics, and future conflict scenarios to help professionals anticipate and respond to the demands of modern warfare.

Audience

Designed for military officers, security analysts, defense planners, policymakers, diplomats, intelligence professionals, academic researchers, and strategic affairs advisors. Also relevant for professionals in institutions tasked with defense innovation, conflict resolution, or geopolitical forecasting.

Instructors

Led by military historians, strategic affairs experts, former defense officials, and security scholars with deep expertise in war studies, hybrid conflict, cyber operations, and strategic doctrine. Instructors combine theoretical insight with operational and institutional experience.
